Proposal to close WT tennis courts to public due decision

Canyon tennis buffs will have nowhere to play if a plan to be submitted to West Texas State University student leaders is approved in the next two weeks.

Frank Castleberry, director of the university Activities Center, said Thursday he will propose to the center board within two weeks a plan to close the university's tennis courts to the public.

If the plan is adopted, local netters may have to wait as much as a year before any courts could be built by either city or school district.

Castleberry said while the plan may be adopted by the center board, it will not be enforceable until the fall when someone can be hired to police the courts.

"We tried to hold off on this," he said, "because when you set it up you've got to enforce it and when you do that costs money."

In addition, Castleberry said, he anticipates an increased demand for the university's courts, which are located just north of the activities center, this spring and summer. Students, faculty and members of booster clubs should have first call on the courts, he said.

"In the next few months, when the kids go out to play and they see people playing who aren't students or faculty, they get pretty hostile and I don't blame them," he said.

Castleberry said he will recommend that the board of directors close the courts to the public and require students, faculty and booster club members to make reservations to use the courts.

WTSU Tennis Coach David Kent, who had warned last year that the time was nearing when the university would be forced to exclude the public from the courts, said it's been difficult in the past for students to get on the courts.

"On pretty days especially, students come out and they can't get on the courts," he said. "If they can't get on because students or faculty members are playing, that's one thing. But if it's because of townspeople, that's another."

Kent, who has urged the Canyon School Board and city commissioners to build courts for public use in the city, said the problem could be solved by construction of courts in Canyon for public use.

That, however, may be a long time coming.

During their last two meetings, members of the Canyon Parks and Recreation Board have discussed in detail the possibility of constructing tennis courts.

During the first session, Mrs. Virginia Cotton, noting the board had only $10,000 in city allocation for new projects, urged the funds go toward construction of tennis courts. She estimated about 13,000 persons would play on four courts during the year.

Board Member Buddy Taylor, however, pushed for construction of baseball diamonds.

Cost estimates for court construction indicated the price for one court would be about $12,000, the price for two would be about $20,000 and the price for three would be about $28,000.

The board voted to construct the baseball diamonds first.

At their last meeting, board members set construction of tennis courts as a second priority, but in the meantime they have also decided they must channel some funds into construction of a new road, playground equipment, trees and a master plan.

Canyon school board members have also discussed the possibility of building tennis courts, possibly in a joint venture with

Canyon misses chance to get HUD funding

A federal community development grant program which was to put $22,000 in city coffers last year will provide nothing this year because the city failed to ask for it.

City Admin. Assistant Tom Plumlee blamed a "breakdown in communications" for the fact that city officials failed to make application for funding this year prior to the deadline for the application.

George Loudder, executive director of the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission, confirmed Friday that the deadline for applying for grant funds through the federal Housing and Urban Development program has passed and no application has been received from Canyon.

Plumlee said Thursday he never received word from the Dallas HUD office notifying the city of the deadlines for filing applications for this year's program.

He said the PRPC was notified of the deadline dates but never told the city and that he never saw a copy of the Federal Register in February which contained the deadline dates.

Loudder said the deadline date notification should have come to the city directly from HUD.

Even if the city had known the deadline dates, Plumlee said Thursday, no information has yet been released on how much money Canyon might have been able to apply for.

Last year, the city applied for and was granted $22,000 to use to pave three city blocks in West Canyon. Among the priorities considered for use of those funds were new park facilities, senior citizens facilities and others.

Now Plumlee says the city has not even received the letter of credit for that $22,000.

And, he says that the work required of the city staff to obtain the $22,000 grant may not make the grant worth the effort.

The HUD community development program has been a mix-up ever since HUD announced the program in the fall of 1974. At that time, the agency announced Canyon would be eligible for as much as $760,000 in grant funds over a six-year period.

But, during the spring of 1975, HUD announced it had made a mathematical mistake and had inadvertently omitted cities like Canyon from funding priorities.

A special act of Congress put Canyon back in the money but only to a limited extent, and the $22,000 was made available last summer.

Meeting turn-out small

Land needs for industry cited

A small turn-out Thursday of citizens to discuss industrial development for Canyon didn't discourage civic leaders who'd called the session and they left after about an hour determined that for the city to attract industry it must have a useable site.

"Well," Chamber of Commerce President Don Johnston said sarcastically as we strode into the community center and surveyed the crowd at the start of the meeting, "there's a lot of interest in industry, isn't there."

Eleven business men showed up for the session, which was to have included chamber board members, industrial foundation members and chamber industrial development committee members.

"If we don't get more (people out) than this, we won't do anything," Johnston told the group. "We won't be able to solve the problem unless we have more people here."

Johnston will call another meeting after March 31 of local citizens interested in industrial development to begin pursuing the possibilities for federal funding under federal Economic Development Administration programs.

City Manager Glen Metcalf was key speaker at the Thursday session and he announced that at 10 a.m. on March 31, officials from the EDA, and the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission will be in Canyon to talk to city commissioners, the city staff and any other interested citizens about funding programs now that Canyon has been named a growth center by the EDA.

Those attending the Thursday session decided their best course of action would be to listen to the EDA presentation and meet again following that March 31 meeting to formally lay plans for purchase of land and construction of an industrial park, possibly using EDA program funds.

Metcalf said the EDA funds might be used particularly in West Canyon which is not now served by city water or sewer service if an industrial park could be located in that general area.

The idea of establishing an industrial park, which industrial developers might point to as useable for light industry, sparked interest at the meeting.

"One thing we need to do is have land we know we can use," Bill Davis, representing the industrial foundation, said. "I think it would be important to have land available."

John Childs, former chamber president and assistant vice president of First National Bank, agreed, but urged the possibility of acquiring options on several smaller pieces of land which would be available should industry want to locate near Canyon.

Metcalf told the group that Canyon will probably not be able to attract heavy industry due to the potential shortage of water available for industrial purposes.

It was generally agreed that light industry or large warehouses would be more advantageous to Canyon.

Prices said too high

House market tough, building official says

Most Americans are priced out of the new housing market and will have to settle for life in smaller homes with fewer luxury items in the future, the director of the Texas Panhandle Home Builders Association said Friday.

Jim Huey told Canyon Kiwanians the biggest problem facing home builders today is construction of homes which people can afford.

"We're finding it more and more difficult every day to provide housing the American people demand and can afford," he said. "Seventy five percent of the people who don't own a home can't affort to buy one."

Huey said 4.5 million couples between the ages of 25 and 34 are actively seeking homes but can't afford to buy new homes. The median price for a new home, he said, is $39,000 and the median income of these couples is $14,800 annually.

"So, they can afford something less than average," he said. "Seventy-two percent of them will buy existing homes. Five years ago it was just the opposite."

Americans will have to stop demanding and builders will have to stop building lavish homes if new homes are to be purchased, Huey indicated.

He compared the average home today with the average home in the mid-1950s. In the '50s, he said, new homes contained an average of 1200 square feet. Today they have an average of 1800 square feet. In the '50s, few homes had air conditioning, built-ins, and other luxury items. Now all new homes have them.

Federal regulations, public demands for luxuries, inflation in land development costs, all have led to the high price of housing, he said.

Huey predicted that as a result of these factors, homes will be smaller and less luxurous in the future and the American people will have to accommodate themselves to that possibility.

Right now, he said, the cheapest home being built in metropolitan areas in the Southwest sell for about $17,700. They include no carpet, only a built-in range, no air conditioning and one-car garages.

"We're going back to the small basic house," he said.

Actually, Huey said, people in the Panhandle have been less hard-hit by high housing costs than have other people in the country. The average price for a new home in New York, for example, is $54,000, he said.

"You don't have to get very far from the Southwest to appreciate

Pay hike miffs city workers

By LAURIE TELFAIR

Several city employees are dissatisfied with proposed raises included in the preliminary budget and at least one employee has resigned recently due to salary considerations.

"We were led to believe that we'd get somewhere between $450 and $500 a month," said Lola Caraway, water administration clerk who has resigned to take a job with Potter County.

Mrs. Caraway, who has worked for the city for more than two years, will start work for Potter County at a salary $23 higher than what she is making now. With the proposed raise, her starting salary will be $17 less than she would have made if she had remained at her job with the Canyon city government.

"But I can't drive to Canyon from Amarillo for $17," she said.

Mrs. Caraway said she was also unhappy because when the city employees were first included under a pay plan about 18 months ago, she was not given any credit for more than a year of city employment.

Also, she said, "I trained two people and did the billing for two months and did not get an extra plugged penny. When the administrative assistant before Tom left, the city manager's secretary did part of that work and she got part of that salary. Then Tom got part of George's salary when he did that job."

Two policemen have also resigned recently for better paying jobs, Police Chief Al Stewart

To cover parts of two states

Interstate Metro funds asked

A first-of-its-kind interstate intelligence unit designed to stifle organized criminal activity will become operational this summer if state and federal officials provide funding for the unit.

Randall County Sheriff Cliff Longest said Thursday the once-controversial Potter-Randall Metro Intelligence Unit will go interstate by joining with a similar unit in eastern New Mexico this summer if a grant application now being formulated is approved in both states.

The link-up of intelligence activities would tie law enforcement agencies in Randall, Potter, Deaf Smith and Gray counties, Texas, with similar agencies in Clayton, Tucumcari, Portales, Hobbs and Clovis, New Mexico.

Discussions on the possible link-up have been underway since last year.

Longest, who is chairman of the board of governors for the Potter-Randall unit, said interstate operations of the unit would help Panhandle and eastern New Mexico officials control narcotics traffic and other forms of organized crime.

He said the five New Mexico cities are currently forming units similar in scope and operation to the Metro squad, which operates through federal funding in Canyon, Amarillo, and Hereford as well as the counties those cities lie within.

Those five units would link up with the local unit through use of a coordinator overseeing the operations of both units, he said.

The grant application now being formulated calls for as much as four years of full funding of the interstate effort. Funding for the Metro unit is to run out June 30 and if the interstate effort is not approved, Metro will be eligible for reduced funding after that time.

The grant must go to the Texas Criminal Justice Council and a similar body in New Mexico.

Longest said the grant calls for two boards of governors, one for each state, which will meet together often to discuss unit operations.

Longest said he sees several advantages in operation of an interstate intelligence unit.

The largest percentage of narcotics traffic coming into the Amarillo metropolitan area comes from New Mexico, he said.

In addition, other forms of organized crime operate across the state lines to avoid apprehension and prosecution.

John Scott, criminal justice coordinator for the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission, is also supportive of the City discussion due Mon. on Canyon North plat plan

A controversial plat for development of Canyon North, a full section of land adjacent the city's north limits, will go to city commissioners Monday night for general discussion.

It was not known Friday whether the plat, which was recommended for approval on March 11 by the city's planning and zoning commission, will go to Randall County commissioners Monday for their discussion.

No action on the plat is anticipated from city commissioners Monday night.

In a memorandum to commissioners circulated late in the week, City Manager Glen Metcalf restates his opposition to approval of the plat as recommended by the planning board.

County commissioner Paul Lindsey, if the the plat is brought before his body Monday, is also expected to oppose approval of the section.

"I believe the commission is aware of the lengthy discussion that took place at the Planning and Zoning Commission meeting and it is still my contention that development of this section of land in the manner proposed without utilities, standard sized streets, and any other requirements placed on normal subdivisions will hinder Canyon's growth to the north in the future," Metcalf says in the memo.

Planning board members ignored the warnings of Metcalf, Lindsey and City Engineer Bill McMorries on March 11 and voted to recommend the city commission approve the plat with several variances granted.

During the March 11 meeting, Metcalf contended the city should require Developer A.W. Lair to meet all specifications in the city's zoning ordinance relative to the section.

Lair contended the section would be an unusual development, consisting of 105 multiple-acre lots, and to meet the specifications would mean he couldn't develop the land at all.

McMorries joined Metcalf in warning that allowing Lair to develop the section without

TPEA official says

Employee group wants city, county organized

A drive to recruit city and county employees as members of Texas Public Employees Association has begun, a TPEA spokesman said Friday.

Fred Custred, public relations representative for the Canyon chapter, met with city manager Glen Metcalf Friday morning to inform him that city employees would be contacted.

Custred said he would meet with county officials later before contacting county workers.

One or two city employees have already shown interest in joining the association, Custred said. "But it's no big deal."

Metcalf said he neither approved nor disapproved of the lobbying association.

"I don't know enough about it to comment," he said. "A representative has contacted me and said he wanted to meet with them (city employees). I said that's fine."

"Of course, you try to take care of your employees. Give them the best you can," he added.

Custred said he did not have any particular grievance in mind in approaching city employees.

"I think everybody in positions like that needs someone to negotiate and do that work for them," he said. "We have the money, we have the expertise and we have the employees to do it."

TPEA is the only viable alternative to a union, Custred said.

The Canyon chapter has 123 members now from among the non-academic employees of West Texas State University, and the Park donations needed now

Like it or not, it is a fact that for years the provision of good recreation facilities for Canyon residents has been given only low priority consideration by city commissioners.

True enough, they have set aside $10,000 of city tax money this year to help start a new park or park system, but $10,000 won't go far in providing the kind of recreation facility those who have studied such things say we need.

Rightly or wrongly, commissioners have taken the attitude that funding for new parks or other recreation facilities must come from the citizens themselves, either through a bond issue, or through donations.

The city will, according to City Manager Glen Metcalf, provide labor and trucks to help, but the funding and support must come from the grass roots.

The effort toward new parks began this year with appointment of a newly-created parks board and with the $10,000 infusion from the city, a donation which amounts to about 3 percent of the total city budget.

The parks board has committed those funds for construction of two baseball diamonds in a new southeast park near the city sewer plant.

But, the board has other plans, for new tennis courts, for example, which will cost from $12,000 for one to about $28,000 for three; for new roads, expensive but necessary if the people are to get into the park to use the facilities; a master plan to ensure the park is functional and useful; playground equipment; and so on. The list could stretch ad infinitum, given the resources.

Since the park board has rejected the idea of a bond issue to finance new park facilities, only one route is available for funding the project — you.

Accounts are now open at West Texas State Bank and First National Bank to accept contributions for new park facilities. Park board members themselves have already thrown about $100 into the kitty. Donors can earmark their contributions for specific projects.

There is also the possibility that money donated can be used to match any federal or state funds which might be available to help the project.

It is obvious that if the people of Canyon really want new parks, they must come forth in sufficient number with sufficient monies to provide the new parks.

If the project fails, we'll not be able to find a governmental scapegoat. In a very real sense, the fund drive amounts to a plebescite on the question of park upgrading.

Vote yes. Donate now to the park fund. — C.W.

On the doomsday approach

Doomsaying, a rhetorical device with a horde of practitioners these days, is fun, really.

Fun because the dynamics of doomsaying demand that fear be a dominant element, and there is something in the perverse nature of man which finds enjoyment in inspiring fear in another human being. Likewise, there is something in that nature which enjoys the tingling feeling of fear.

Doomsaying is an interesting technique used nowadays by editorialists and by various environment or ecology-oriented organizations, editorialists and doomsayers finding it a handy device to call attention to something upon which public opinion should be focused.

The most important thing about doomsaying, which involves extrapolation from a set of premises or assumptions, is the starting point for a message of doom. Conclusions based on faulty assumptions or premises are likely to be just as faulty.

And, there is something about doom and gloom messages which is conducive to self-fullfillment. A strong belief in the doomsday approach to prognostication can and often does lead to a preclusion of options, a limitation on courses of action.

Take the food crisis doomsday message, a popular subject now, because it involves the specter of global upheaval, of a Third World revolution, and possible starvation on a mass basis.

This message of doom is doubly fun because it mixes with the fun of inspiring fear the fun of inspiring guilt.

Doomsayers concentrating their efforts on the global food crisis begin with certain premises. They argue that the problem is basically one of population as did Malthus. They argue that the haves eventually will be pitted against the have-nots and the have-nots will either starve en masse or will rise up to take from the haves what they have.

The message is basically unemotional in text, but pure hysteria in context.

In terms of global resources, the basic problem is not one of population or food supply.

It is a moral problem.

In a Christian context, every man is responsible and accountable for his actions. A belief in God is not enough. Man must act on his belief, not just to pull himself up by his bootstraps, but to help others do likewise.

If the basic assumption is that the haves must act within a Christian context, then, certain doors are opened which are closed if one argues only that population is the basic problem in the food crisis and that resources will not be able to serve the population.

The individual or the nation which works from the Christian assumption, determines it is his or its responsibility to help the have-nots and sets about to do it. He does not offer a doomsday prediction because faith precludes that finding.

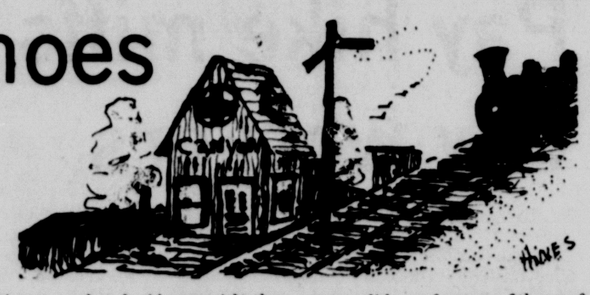
Doomsday predictions about the severity of the food crisis and the eventuality of mass starvation and mass revolution, on the other hand, preclude certain options which are available to sustain the world.

Arguments for triage, or for American isolation from the remainder of the world, preclude the prospects of intervention, technological advances, and corporate consciousness. The doom at the end of the argument is viewed less as a prediction and more as an inescapable eventuality. They border on having the effect of self-fullfilling prophecy.

Arguments from the Christian frame of reference, on the other hand, open the door for new adventures in providing resources to feed the masses, in applying technological advances to tap the vast food supplies of the oceans, to perfect more miracle seeds, to perfect avenues for the re-allocation of resources.

There are alternatives to the doomsday prediction of starving millions. It just depends on where you start and where you want to end up. — C.W.

Bicentennial echoes from the past



By JANE STEPHENS

Canyon City in 1906 was at a crossroads, a place of commitment and of challenge. The village, for it was little more than that, had been designated the county seat of Randall County, a coveted status; but commitment in the form of permanent buildings, homes, sidewalks, and streets were scarcely in evidence. Cattle and livestock ran unchecked through the town, forcing residents to construct fences around their homes, not to keep children and pets in, but to keep cattle, goats, and sheep out. Sanitary conditions were so poor that Canyon City faced the threat of a full scale epidemic of typhoid fever each year during the late summer months. Fire was a constant threat to a town filled with wooden buildings and with only an unorganized bucket brigade to fight the flames. The CANYON CITY NEWS noted all of these problems and began a campaign to incorporate a city government. THE NEWS noted that Canyon City had "now outgrown the village 'dress' and needs incorporation and needs it badly."

Throughout the year of 1906, the newspaper took every opportunity to encourage incorporation, even at the expense of a sister city. One April 6, 1906, an election for incorporation was held in Hereford and was defeated 77 to 56. Editorializing, the paper said: "The sanitary conditions in Hereford are in fully as bad shape as here, if not worse, and incorporation, giving organized regulation, is the only remedy as far as The News kens." A story late in May cited the problem of loose livestock: "Last Saturday our neighborhood was visited by an unknown herd of goats and sheep ... would be glad if owner would come and get them as they are very destructive. A well kept and good appearing town, and this requires incorporation, would be a fine thing to have in Canyon City." Another story says: "Cows are terribly aggravating at times esp. to those minus the protections of good fences and gates ..."

People were coming to the Panhandle of Texas by the railroad car full to buy cheap land as advertised in the most glowing of terms by enterprising land agents. Many of the new settlers felt free to move on to other counties if their expections of this new land were not fulfilled in one place. New settlers had to be firmly convinced that they had come to the right place before they became permanent residents. Canyon City was often visited by "excursioners," as they were termed, who disembarked from railroad cars filled with their life's possessions, and took a look at what the town had to offer. It distressed many of the citizens of Canyon City that some of the features which would encourage permanent settlement were absent. The newspaper bemoaned the wooden buildings and encouraged "No man need halt from making permanent improvements in Canyon City, such as concrete or brick homes or brick business houses. The town needs them more and more ..." George Brandon, the editor of THE NEWS, felt it was in the interest of the Community as a whole "to obtain a grain elevator, a steam laundry, an electric light plant, a brick yard, a waterworks system and to adopt ways and means to bring actual settlers to the surrounding country." Many of these changes and improvements could be accomplished only through incorporation.

By September 14, a final encouragement, in the tragic form of an outbreak of typhoid fever, brought the matter of incorporation to a head. Along with the reports of those dead and dying, the newspaper finds: "The typhoid cases now in town have renewed the talk of incorporation and nothing short of a measure of this character will deal with such questions with any degree of satisfaction."

Mrs. Bertie Strain remembers the bout she had with typhoid fever that summer. "I was in bed for eighty-one days and was so weak when I left the bed that I had to learn how to walk all over again." "Mother's Remedies," a 1910 medical book for home use, advises that the normal course of the disease was three to four weeks, but was often longer due to a variety of possible complication. The only treatment recommended for the victims of typhoid was "bedrest and expert nursing."

The soon-to-be-elected Mayor of Canyon City Judge Jasper N. Haney spoke for immediate incorporation saying: "Boys, something has got to be done. Here we are with a hundred cows and a town bull running wild over fences, gardens and streets. Here we are with unsanitary conditions in every backyard feeding the flies that are carrying typhoid all over our little town. And here we are helpless and unable to do nothing about it. We have to incorporate. We must call an election."

George L. Abbott, one of the first aldermen, carried the incorporation petition to 117 people and on September 29, 1906, eighty-seven people voted for incorporation and only one opposed. There was no organized slate at the November 3rd election for town offices. Candidates did not file, so voters wrote in one name for each of seven offices: Mayor, City Marshall and five Aldermen. Just prior to the election THE NEWS states: "So far as THE NEWS knows, there are no candidates for any of these offices. It is hardly likely however that any permanent citizen of the town will refuse to serve if elected, and the voter should have little trouble in making good selections all the way."

Judge Jasper N. Haney was chosen Canyon City's first Mayor over the crusading edibor George Brandon by five votes, 75-70. Brent C. Taylor was elected City Marshall and the aldermen were T.H. Rowan, D.A. Park, J.F. Smith, G.L. Abbott and J.T. Service.

On November 9th, THE NEWS carried the following generous editorial by the defeated George Brandon: "It is no little thing or easy matter to put the incorporation harness on a people unused to it and to hold it there. If put on all at once they generally, as did Hereford, San Angelo and several other good Texas towns, buck out of it. To succeed you must lay on one strap at a time and be right easy about that.

"The present Town Council,

A lesson in trust, help

By CARROLL WILSON

The wife, kids and I had been to Amarillo much of the afternoon visiting Grandpa and Grandma and watching The Wizard of Oz on their color television set.

Rebecca was sleeping, her head slumped over the little padded bar of her car seat, and D'Arcy and Julie were quiet, tired from a long day, and an exciting movie of witches and make-believe.

I was doing about 50 south on U.S. 87 because my aged Volkswagen won't go over 50 without shivering and shaking to such an extent that control is questionable.

Just before we went under the McCormick Road overpass, underwhich I must honk three times while the girls lick their forefingers, ram them in to the ceiling fabric of the car, close their eyes and make wishes, my terminally-ill auto developed a new quirk seemingly unrelated to the shimmy and shake which threatens to rattle it to a premature demise.

It was a thump-thump-thump sound which I finally mentally isolated as coming from the rear end of the vehicle. I pushed in on the clutch and dismissed the most dismal prospect that the machine was finally going to kick off right there on the highway.

Under the McCormick Road over-pass we thump-thumped and just as I rounded the turn in the highway, the thump-thump gave way to a loud bang, the back end of the car plunged pavement-ward and I gingerly applied the brakes as I steered for the shoulder.

The car was not dead after all. Just injured.

Death would probably have been more welcome. I've been prepared for that prospect for months.

Dressed in Sunday-best navy blue trousers and jacket, I surveyed the source of my concern—a flat passenger side rear tire.

No big deal, right?

Susan pulled on the emergency lights and I groped in the trunk for all those levers and mechanisms they gave me with the car years ago and which are now lodged in nooks and crannies in the back seat and under the front deck, between potato chip packages, Coke bottles, unused Pampers, and thermas jugs.

After mobilizing the whole in-car crew, I approached the rear tire with jack, crow bar, and a little jigger that fits on the crow bar to loosen the lug nuts.

And I saw immediately I was in trouble.

There is no way, I had learned before, to remove the hubcap of a Volkswagen without a screwdriver or other similar device.

Past the thermas jugs, Pampers, Coke bottles, potato chip bags et al I pushed, looking for the screwdriver. Unsuccessfully.

I opted for the most logical approach.

Armed with a spatula, which I keep in the car to remove snow and ice from the windshield, I attacked the hubcap.

Next I tried a little gadget which hangs on the seat belts which we don't use.

Next I tried the old sullen-and-insulted, standing there beside the car, grimacing and uttering menacing oaths as dozens of motorists whizzed past.

Now it was about 8 o'clock and it was a Sunday night and I didn't exactly look like a pervert or rapist or burglar or armed robber.

But, those cars, many of them undoubtedly good Canyon folks, just zipped on by. At least they didn't honk.

This, I thought, is the friendly, open Texas Panhandle. It's not New York City or Los Angeles.

Just about the time I had decided we'd abandon the car and walk to the nearest home to call the local service station, a kid, must have been about 16 or 17, zipped from the service road onto the highway shoulder on a motorcycle.

"Can I help you?" he asked, and I told him of my need for a screwdriver.

In an instant he was back with a friend, armed with two screwdrivers and in two minutes we had the flat tire changed.

I relate the story to make a couple of points: (a) we kid ourselves when we say Panhandle folks aren't as distrustful and hesitant to get involved as Easterners, and (b) there's hope for us yet if our kids can thrust aside that distrust long enough to lend some help.

Our world

Let them emulate us

By ANN BROWN

All the hand wringing, tears, and taxes that America has expended on the Third World has not improved their status — nor ours.

The study of history, once considered a vital subject for all scholars, has fallen into disrepute. Yet it is only by observing history that anyone has ever been able to correctly evaluate the future.

If Americans were to send every bite of food in our Country to the starving peoples of the world, it would only allay a little hunger temporarily; it would not change any nation's way of life.

Back in the 40's, the daughter of a governor in China, who escaped the communists with bullet holes in her clothing, said, "If you want to help China, don't send her your gold, send her your God."

If we really want to help the backward, hungry nations of the world, we need to send them the truth about their Creator as revealed in Jesus Christ.

Obviously, not everyone in America is a Christian, and even the best Christian falls far short of the ideal, which is perfection.

History, however, gives ample proof that wherever the Christian message of loving, working, and sharing has gone, it carried with it peace and prosperity.

The only economic system compatible with Christianity is free enterprise. God wants every man to be free (John 8:32). And no man can be free as long as he must slave to support his neighbors.

The starving millions in India could dine well on the cattle that roam the land eating up the vegetation. As long as Indians prefer worshiping cows to eating them, there is no way Americans can keep them fed.

Any people who produce more than they consume (like Americans), will prosper. And any nation that consumes more than it produces (like India), will be poor.

The Bible teaches that man should provide for his own household (I Tim. 5:8), and share on a voluntary basis with those who are unable to work. Anyone who refuses to work has no right to eat the fruit of another's labor (II Thess. 3:10).

China, India, and other crowded countries have refused America's technology on the grounds that tractors would deprive workers of jobs.

But technology does not destroy job opportunities; it merely changes them. And in the process it raises the standard of living for all concerned.

Machines freed millions of laborers from slavery in American fields; many of them are now more pleasantly employed making clothing, furniture, automobiles, and other appliances for man's comfort and pleasure.

Bell Telephone reports that if advances in technology had not relieved the need for telephone operators, there would not be enough women between the ages of 16 and 60 in America to handle the calls.

According to the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, it costs about 4 minutes "work time" in Washington, D.C., to buy a loaf of white bread.

A loaf of bread cannot be made in 4 minutes, to say nothing of the cost of materials. So some workers get much more for their labor than others do.

The contribution of the "workers" in Washington is more than questionable. But scientists, inventors, ministers, teachers, and farmers give far more to society than they get back in coin; their satisfaction, however, is priceless.

Unless we can share the truth about God, technology, and economics with the deprived, depraved, and dispossessed, we cannot help them. Our tears and taxes are both wasted.

If the Third World wants to achieve our standard of living, let them adapt our way of life instead of demanding the fruit of our labors.

Letters to the editor

For ambulance club

Dear Sir:

I have been a resident of Canyon, Texas for about two months and have come to realize that Canyon is a city full of friendly people with a good deal of common sense. Although I am relatively new in this community, the people I have come to know have already accepted and have made me feel at home here. Keeping this in mind I am hoping I can help my employer to make Canyon and the surrounding area a better place to live.

Before coming to Canyon I had accumulated 110 hours of emergency training including becoming a Registered Emergency Medical Technician both nationally and through the state of Kansas. I have been working in the ambulance business for 18 months and during this time I have had a chance to study the management and supervision of ambulance services such as the one here in Canyon.

Because of the education and experience that I have acquired, I decided to work part time with the Canyon Ambulance Service while I was going to college. In one month I have come to know my employer as the type of person who would be able to put together the type of ambulance service this city deserves. Richard Bertrand has proven many times that he is doing the best job possible with the resources he has had. Even so, he is not happy with providing just an adequate ambulance service to an area that has the potential of having the best Emergency Medical Service in the state of Texas and ranked very high in the United States. Richard has done a lot of research on different types of ambulance services and has come up with the type of service that Randall County deserves.

The type of service I am referring to is the membership type which would require the participation of the people in this area. Family membership for one year would cost $15 which is 37.5 percent of the cost of one ambulance run. Or it would cost $10 per individual which is 25 percent of one emergency run. Each member would then receive free ambulance service within the county for that year.

With a good percentage of the people becoming members, our employer would be able to utilize the membership money into a maximum care ambulance service. Through this we would eventually be able to set up a paramedic system with just the annual membership fee.

Although Richard is ready to start this membership type service, he is able to do so only if the people who are in control of his contract allow him to.

The contract is one in which the County, the City, and Palo Duro Hospital are subsidizing the Canyon Ambulance Service for the amount of $36,000 a year. If the membership service were successful, these subsidies would eventually no longer be needed. Therefore the taxpayers money could be funneled back into the city and utilized elsewhere.

Unfortunately the controllers of the contract are afraid the people will not accept the membership thus hindering the success of the service. I believe that this is an insult to the com-

Drivers licenses now include anatomical gift check-off

Drivers licenses issued to Randall County residents since the first of the year contain a statement whereby the holder of the license may designate any part of his body as an anatomical gift at the time of his death, but local officials say they have no way of knowing how many newly-licensed drivers have taken advantage of the service.

Monita Benham, who runs the local Department of Public Safety license office, said she keeps no records nor does the state department concerning how many residents are participating.

The 64th Legislature enacted a law allowing the license statement.

Accordingly, all drivers licenses issued after January 1, contain the statement which specifies any or all of the donor's body that may be used as an anatomical gift, said Major C.W. Bell, Region 5 Commander.

If a person does not desire to participate in the anatomical gift program, Bell said, he need not do anything regarding completion of the statement. Drivers license continue to be laminated on the front but the back is not laminated in order that holders of the licenses may sign the statement.

The anatomical gift statement is printed on the reverse side of the donor's operator's, commercial operator's or chauffeur's license. The gift is invalid on expiration, cancellation, revocation or suspension of the license or by lining out that portion of the statement.

Bell added that another method of voiding or canceling the statement would be to secure a duplicate drivers license in which case the reverse side of the permit would be left blank.

For the gift provision of the license to be valid, the statement must be executed each time the license is replaced, reinstated or renewed. The document must be signed by the donor in the presence of witnesses who must sign the document in the donor's presence.

License which are currently valid in Texas will not be replaced with the newly-designed one, but as holders renew their licenses, they will receive the license which contains the gift statement.

If currently licensed drivers desire the newly-designated one, they may contact their nearest DPS drivers license office and apply for a duplicate license for which there is a minimal charge.

The law that was enacted by the Legislature only requires the DPS to provide a space on the license for the statement concerning the availability of the anatomical gift. "We do not maintain records regarding the anatomical gifts," Bell added.

Recipients of gifts of bodies or vital organs may be any hospital, surgeon or physician, for medical or dental science, therapy or transplantation; or any accredited medical or dental school, college or university for education, research, advancement of medical or dental science or therapy.

Vegetable gardening discussed

"Vegetable Gardening" was the subject of Ray Wells' program as he spoke for fellow members of the Canyon Garden Club Tuesday evening, March 16.

Wells discussed planting time for the garden, care and raising of a garden and briefly covered the preservation methods for foodstuffs from the garden.

About 20 members were present for the meeting held in the Lewis B. Hinders' home at 2510 8th Avenue.

Members answered the roll call with hints and ideas on "getting ready for spring."

Baha'i observes new beginning

A new year begins for members of the Baha'i Faith on March 21, the first day of Spring and the beginning of the year 133 B.E. The letters B.E. mean Baha'i Era; the Baha'i calendar dates from the time of the religion's origin in 1844 in Iran. Since that date, the Baha'i Faith has been established in over 300 countries and territories.

For the Baha'is, New Year's Day (Naw-Ruz), is a holy day on which all work should be suspended.

The Baha'is of Canyon will join the Amarillo Community for a pot-luck dinner and a program on the celebration of Naw-Ruz, March 21, to begin at 5 p.m. at the Wesley Community Center in Amarillo, and will be open to all.

'76 Bicentennial celebration plans discussion Monday

Randall County's celebration of the bi-centennial will be discussed further at a planning session Monday afternoon, March 22, in the First National Bank.

The committee meeting will begin at 4 p.m. with Jane Stephens, chairman, in charge. Randall County will be celebrating the bi-centennial during the annual summertime celebration which has been set to center on July 3 this year.

Wait begins for weather opponents

A group of Randall County area farmers and ranchers must wait for about 60 days before they'll know whether their most recent effort at halting cloud-seeding operations in Hale and Lamb counties has been successful.

The group, Citizens for Natural Weather, presented their case through a half-dozen sworn witnesses Wednesday and Thursday in a formal hearing in Lubbock.

Nolon Henson of the Happy Hereford Ranch in south Randall County, president of the group, said late Thursday he was satisfied with the hearing.

The hearing officer, legal counsel for the Texas Water Development Board, is to make a recommendation to the TWDB on the question of whether four-year permits should be issued to weather modification associations.

Within 60 days, the board is to make a decision on the requests for permits.

The Plains Weather Improvement Association, headquartered in Hale County, and the Atmospherics, Inc., headquartered in Littlefield, had applied last fall for permits to modify weather through cloud-seeding.

The Randall County area group protested, charging that cloud-seeding on the South Plains alters rainfall patterns in the northern reaches of the area.

Henson said the formal judicatory hearing ended late Thursday after the two days of testimony.

Key witnesses for the Citizens for Natural Weather were Henson, Walter Graham, also of the Happy Hereford Ranch, Clyde Hancock of Happy, a man from Littlefield and one from New Mexico.

Henson presented data on rainfall for more than a dozen weather stations north of the areas where clouds have been seeded in the past by the two weather modification outfits, data indicating rainfall amounts have been altered.

Henson said the group presented no expert witnesses to counteract several expert witnesses presented by the two modification groups.

The pro-cloud-seeding groups presented opinion evidence through the expert witnesses to show that cloud-seeding had no impact on rainfall outside the specific target areas.

The Citizens for Natural Weather had petitioned earlier this year for an informal hearing in this area on the permits. Several TWDB members were present for those hearings.

Budget and zoning to dominate city commissioners meeting

Budget hearings, zoning requests and disposal of the old city hall and library property will occupy much of the city commissioners' meeting Monday night.

A public hearing will be called to consider the proposed budget and then budget ordinances and establishment of the tax rate at $1.82 per $100 valuation are scheduled.

The commissioners are scheduled to hear re-zoning requests that include Hunsley Hills, property on 9th Avenue and a request that was disapproved by the planning and zoning board to change a lot on 5th Avenue from multi-family to retail.

A discussion of the plat for Canyon North, a country-type development north of Hunsley Hills, is also included on the agenda. The subdivision being developed by A.W. Lair was considered recently by the planning and zoning board, which recommended that variances to the city subdivision regulations be granted.

Plans for selling the old city hall building and the lot, and possibly the building, occupies by the old library are also included for discussion.

Bids for sealing coating city streets also are to be opened and the commissioners are scheduled to approve the appointment of Mrs. Joseph Findley as the library's lay representative to the Major Resource Council.

The commissioners will meet at 7 p.m. in commission chambers at the Civic Complex.

Loudder lists boundary for growth center

George Loudder, executive director of the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission, announced Friday the boundaries assigned by the federal Economic Development Administration to the Canyon-Amarillo growth center.

He had announced last Monday the two-city metropolitan area, plus a corridor between the two, had been designated a growth center within a Panhandle-wide economic development region.

Loudder said official word from Washington is that the growth center designation applies to the corporate limits of Amarillo and Canyon, plus the extra-territorial jurisdictions of the two cities, plus a corridor extending two miles each side of the center line of Interstate 27 between the two cities.

Growth centers under the EDA program are eligible for a wide variety of funding programs not available to other cities in the region.

Candidate lists program

A seven-point program was proposed this week by Jim Madewell, candidate for the city commission.

Madewell listed needs that ranged from increased recreation facilities to improving downtown Canyon.

His proposals included repair of city alleys, improvement and construction of more baseball and tennis facilities, examine additional zoning for multi-family use and improving communications between the city commission and residents.

Madewell also suggested selling the old city hall and using the money for additional recreation facilities. This has also been suggested by the city administration.

In addition, Madewell said he would like to see the commission work with the Chamber of Commerce to improve the downtown section. He proposed aiding the senior citizens by serving as "a personal friend on the commission."

The youngest candidate in the race, Madewell said he does not see his age as a handicap. His employment in the city water department for a year and his three years coaching experience in the Babe Ruth baseball league have provided experience in several areas of public concern, Madewell said.

Madewell also said he felt that the WTSU students were often neglected as only temporary residents of the city. The university, he said, should be placed high on the list of Canyon's priorities.

McCarter picked for state office

Roy McCarter, president of the local chapter of Texas Public Employees Association, is unopposed for a position on the policy-making board of the statewide organization.

McCarter is a nominee as one of the three representatives from this region. He will be sworn in at the state convention in July.

McCarter, one of the co-founders to the Canyon TPEA chapter, is a member of the insurance committee at WTSU, has coached Little League baseball and serves as a greeter at First Baptist Church.

Last year, he led a delegation from Canyon to lobby for passage of the Personnel Act by the state legislature.

Canyon FHA groups attend area meeting

Three Canyon organizations participated Friday and Saturday in the area-wide Future Homemakers of America conference at the Amarillo Civic Center.

FHA chapters at Canyon High and Canyon Junior High and the vocational-related HERO chapter at Canyon High took part in the conference that included schools from Lubbock to the northern Panhandle.

CHS junior, Sharon Lindemann, who serves as fourth vice-president for the area, coordinated a talent show.

About 40 Canyon students participated in the conference.

Patrolman Jack Foley, who joined the Canyon force in December has resigned to take a job as a truck driver, said Stewart.

"He's going from $565 to $1,600 a month," said Stewart.

Floyd Burk, who was hired less than two months ago as the Metro officer, has left the force to become police chief for Olney.

City pay raises set to go into effect April 1 if the budget is approved at the public hearing Monday night range from 2½ to 10 per cent. An additional five per cent is to go into effect on the aniversary date of employment for each worker.

According to city manager Glen Metcalf and administrative assistant Tom Plumlee, who devised the salary adjustments, the higher percentage of raises will go generally to the lower paid employees.

But water administration clerks say the raises are less than they had expected.

"I would have applied for the janitor's job," said one clerk, "but when I mentioned it, they said no, wait. I was led to believe I'd get a better raise."

The custodian for the civic center is paid more than the water administration clerks. Mariano Romero, who began work as custodian for the civic center in December, now makes $450 a month. His raise will be less than one per cent, Romero said, amounting to $4 a month.

Mist Wilson, clerk who has worked for the city since last May will be raised from $383 to $421 a month, or 10 per cent and Charlotte Douglas, a clerk since December, will be raised from $369 to $402 a month.

After April 1, $402 will be the lowest salary paid a city employee, according to Plumlee. Under the present pay scale, city salaries start at $365, but employees at that level were raised to $369 in January to comply with minimum wage laws.

But, they have opted to include the construction of courts in two recent bond issues, both of which failed by wide margins.

The courts, under the school plan, were to be constructed at the high school. Four courts were planned.

Parks Board Chairman George Ritter told the board recently that he was told by Supt. Jerry Jacobs the school district had no immediate plans for new court construction due to the bond issue failures, but that the project might be reconsidered at any time.

Members of the WTSU activities center board include the president of the student senate, president of the Student Activities Council, president of the Residence Hall Association, a representative from the Associated Women Students, a Greek representative, staff personnel, Dr. T. Lindsey contended the street already laid down in the development does not meet county road specifications.

McMorries is expected to be on hand for the Monday night city commission meeting.

The planning board allowed Lair variances to the zoning ordinance, variances which, if granted by the city commission, would free him from requirements for providing water and sewer service to the section, requirements which require curb and gutter on streets and which require other street improvements.

If city commissioners refuse to approve the plat as recommended by the planning board, it will be an unprecedented move.

Municipal employees have only recently begun to join the association, Custred said and Austin has the only chapter of city employees.

TPEA is an organization of state workers founded in 1946 to promote the interests of public employees. The association has supported pay increases for non-academic employees in state colleges and universities, promoted funding for workman's compensation laws and pushed for improvements in group insurance, merit raises, vacation and sick leave and retirement. TPEA is presently supporting a comprehensive personnel act.

The group's by-laws prohibit strikes by public employees and forbid affiliation with or endorsement of any labor union.

Custred said that employee relations committes from the local chapter conduct such matters as salary negotiations. Should they be unable to resolve conflicts, then representatives from the state organization will assist.

Looking glass of fashions showing here next Saturday

A surrey would have been one of the most practical means of getting into town in 1905. Mrs. Theodore Freidell models a Sunday dress from that year.

Fashions from the past will be shown in a public revue being sponsored by Faculty Wives, Etc. next Saturday afternoon in the second floor lecture room of the Panhandle Plains Historical Museum.

Entitled "Through the Looking Glass," the revue will begin at 2:30 p.m. and tickets are presently available at $1 from Celia Mitchell, Frances Muir, Alta Smith, Jane Stephens and Anne Thomason.

The revue will feature both formal and informal attire dating as early as 1776. Interlaced with the presentation of fashions will be a film titled "American Woman" being provided by Butterick Patterns which discusses the way that clothing styles through the years are set by the moods of the people.

Fashions from the Civil War era, the Gibson Girl styles of the 1890's, and the World War I and World War II periods will be shown along with numerous other fashions selected from the museum's fashion collection. The museum's fashion collection was screened by Jackie Wilson and Francis Muir for inclusion in the revue.

Historic apparel from private collections will also be shown including items from the private collection of Mrs. Robert O'Keefe, costume mistress for Theatre Amarillo (formerly Amarillo Little Theatre); and from Mrs. Irving Alexander of Alexander's Fashions.

Modeling their own heirloom fashions will be Mrs. Mario Coleman and Mrs. Robert Sawvell along with Faculty Wives members who are serving on the hospitality committee.

Other models for the revue will include Barbara Coleman and daughter, Terri, Barbara Sawvell, Frances Muir, Janet Nelson, Helen Freidell, Diane Crossland, Carolyn Blackburn, Jeane Miller and Alta Smith.

Historic portrayal fills USC afternoon

Williamsburg was the background setting for a program presented by Mrs. Ivan Hull of Borger for the membership of University Study Club at the Girl Scout Building in Canyon on Friday, March 12.

Mrs. Hull was dressed in an authentic Martha Washington costume, for which she had spent several weeks of research and then had made the scarlet gown with lace front panel with hand stitching throughout.

The program covered the history of Martha Washington's life from early childhood through her two marriages culminating in her death. The program was presented in conjunction with historical slides.

Special club guests for the meeting were Mrs. Floyd Tomlinson, Billy Reed, Raymond Raillard, Sheryl Adams, the club's scholarship student, Glen Burrell and Mrs. Hull's daughter, Mrs. Sarah Alexander of Borger.

Refreshments were served by the hostesses Mrs. Tom Keeling, Mrs. Truett Hull and Mrs. Ed Harrell from a table centered with a spring floral arrangement in a Paul Revere Bowl carrying out the bicentennial theme.

Mrs. John Childs, club president, presided during the afternoon business meeting. Mrs. Murphy White gave a report from the projects committee on the progress of the atrium at Palo Duro Hospital and a recent contribution to the library. Other members of the committee are Mrs. James Irlbeck, Mrs. Robert Lindsey and Mrs. Bennie Lippold.

Serving as secretary for the afternoon, Mrs. Allen Winters read minutes of the executive committee which had met earlier in the home of Mrs. Weldon McClure. The club's membership and dues were discussed along with the members decision to participate in the bicentennial "Windows To The Past" celebration on May 15. The club will sell homemade ice cream at the event with Mrs. Robert Law as chairman of the committee.

Mrs. Harold Erwin gave a brief report on the upcoming District Convention to be held in Dalhart, April 2-3 and urged each member to have their reservations complete by March 27.

Mrs. Erwin also gave the club's minuteman forecast, which informs members about the next month's club meeting. The club's next meeting will be "A Taste of Yesterday" with the program to be held at the Farm Bureau Building with a representative from Southwestern Public Service Company in charge of the program.

Following a pledge to the United States flag, the club meeting was adjourned.

Garden Scene

By RICK WILCOX

It's about that time again. Time to start work on this year's garden. As we did last year, we'll be going step-by-step through the growing of a small organic vegetable garden.

First order of business is choosing what to plant. Make up your list before you go seed shopping, or you'll come home with more than you can find space for.

I suggest lettuce, tomatoes, onions, radishes, chard, squash, bush beans and beets as a basic garden. All produce good quantity in a small space and are easy to care for. If you have more space, try adding okra, corn, peppers, pole beans, etc. In fact, if you have a sunny fence area, you can substitute pole beans for bush beans on the basic list. Grow then on nylon or wire netting or on a fence for even more return from the space available.

Don't bother to buy tomatoes or onion seeds. Get onion "sets"—miniature onion bulbs you just set in the ground—and tomato transplants from a nursery or department store garden department. The onions can go in most any time now, but hold off until May on the tomatoes. One packet of each of the other vegetables will be more than enough for a small plot.

Oak Leaf lettuce is a looseleaf (non-heading) variety very tolerant of heat and drouth—obviously a good choice for this area. If you can't find it, take Black Seeded Simpson or other loose leaf type.

Fordhook Giant chard is a leafy vegetable related to a beet but with no enlarged root. Also called "spinach beet," it is heat resistant and very good. It can be planted early and harvested all year by cutting the outside stalks. New ones replace them with surprising speed.

Zucchini and yellow crookneck summer squash are fast-growing (50-55 days to harvest) and prolific. Plant where they can get maximum sun and stand back.

Beets, radishes and beans are all easy to grow. Beet greens and roots can both be eaten so the return for space used is very good. Most any variety of green or yellow bush bean will do fine. If you plant pole beans, Romano is my favorite. Pinto beans right from the grocery store are also excellent if picked as snap beans before they get too large (big ones have strings). They have the extra advantage of being adapted to the hot and dry Southwest.

Until next time . . .

Educational innovations topic of Canyon Study Club's meeting

"Innovations in Education" were discussed by Ruth Holladay, curriculum director of secondary education for Canyon Independent School District, at the meeting of Canyon Study Club on March 16.

The speaker was introduced by Judy Becknell, club president, as the club's monthly meeting was held at 1205 Brookhaven in the home of Mrs. Durwood Henderson with 18 members present.

Included in the club's brief business meeting were various committee reports on the club's current project given by Andrea Metcalf and Sandra McRoberts. The two are co-chairmen for the April 10 pageant to select the 1976 Miss Canyon.

Next meeting of the Canyon Study Club will be April 19 in the home of Mrs. Charles Boston with the program to feature aspects of home gardening with John Brazzil, county extension agent in agriculture, to be the speaker.

The Dames meeting began at 12:30 with a luncheon in the Episcopal Center and included a plant swap of both indoor and outdoor plants among the members and guests.

Next meeting of the club will be April 15 at the Episcopal Center and is planned as a game day to begin at 12:30 p.m. All members and others interested in joining the group are encouraged to attend.

No-till farming more attractive as water and labor costs climb

The cost of labor and water is creating new interest in farming methods that soil conservationists have advocated for several years.

A number of Randall County farmers are using forms of minimum tillage cultivation, said Soil Conservation Service worker Don Dolle.

"Of course, some farmers used that type of farming before the soil service ever thought of it," Dolle said. But for the most part, increased usage has come slowly, he said. SCS conservationists have publicized minimum tillage farming for about four years.

In minimum tillage, also called mulch tillage or no-tillage, the new crop is planted into a field still covered with the residue of the previous crop. Usually, a special implement cuts a furrow about two inches wide, explained Dolle, and prepares a seed bed for the next crop. The stubble from the previous crop remains to conserve moisture and retard wind and water erosion.

Ed Wieck of Umbarger, began using minimum tillage with milo about two years ago, believes he gets the most profit from his irrigation with that method.

"I sure think it is the way to go," he said. "We had some yields last year that were pretty good yields. For the expenses that went into it, we got a higher return per unit of water."

Last summer, Wieck's minimum tillage fields were toured by visitors from England and researchers from Bushland.

He is not sure he will use the method this year.

"Last year, it worked ideally," he said. "It works better if you have more cooperation with nature than we've had so far."

"We try to get a crop up and growing on natural rainfall and then use irrigation as needed," he said.

If it remains dry, Wieck said he will use other methods of cultivation to try to boost yields on smaller areas.

One of the major attractions of minimum tillage farming is the reduction of labor costs.

Wieck said he cut his field operations last year from probably five or six to two.

Dolle estimated that some farmers go over a field 15 or more times during the growing season.

There are several disadvantages, Dolle said. Weeds can be a problem and must be controlled with chemicals. Special equipment needed is costly, he said. However, Wieck said he converted some old, unused equipment for minimum tillage methods. Yields can be lower, Dolle said.

But mainly, he said, "Minimum tillage looks trashy. Farmers, especially the more progressive ones, have had a tendency to keep things neat, work that stubble into the ground as soon as possible."

Dolle said that county conservationists have not emphasized minimum tillage methods here. That type of farming is being used more extensively in Panhandle and Hereford, he said.

But as costs climb, Dolle said, the money saving features of the method are likely to become more appealing to farmers.

The out-going members were Don Dolle, Ida Frank, Bud Hickman and Cecilia Tenorio, who were recognized for their contributions.

The two new student appointees to the WTSU United Campus Ministry (UCM) Board of Directors are Barbara McBride and Roxanne Rossi who are joining the existing Catholic representatives Fr. Jack Gist, Mike Moscoe and faculty members, Hubert Oppe and John Reeves.

Earlier this month, CYO high school students from St. Ann's had a ski trip to Red River. Adult sponsors were Fr. Gist, Ron and Marie Kershen and Dale and Monette Merriman. They left Canyon in a custom-built bus loaned by the Merrimans and loaded with skis. There were a couple of minor skiing mishaps but persons involved are reported none-the-worse for the wear.

School board meet to talk new school

Discussion of the recent defeat by voters of a $5.5 million bond issue for construction of new schools is again omitted from the Canyon School Board agenda for a Tuesday night meeting.

But, Supt. Jerry Jacobs said Friday that doesn't mean there won't be discussion of the bond issue defeat of Feb. 17.

Jacobs said he doesn't know whether the board will or will not discuss the election and the future possibility for new schools at the Tuesday meeting, but that diacussion could come under an "other business" agenda item or under an item calling for discussion of plans for a new elementary school.

Board members met two weeks ago and failed to confront the issue of the bond vote defeat. They did begin discussion at that time of plans for a new elementary school and school architect B.R. Cantrell presented two new schematic drawings of floor plans.

The board put off action on a question from Jacobs at that meeting on whether the architect and school staff should continue making plans for construction of an elementary school and whether those plans should be for an open-concept classroom approach or for a traditional schoolhouse.

Other items on the agenda include:

*Consideration of a letter from Gulf Republic Service Corporation withdrawing a school site offer made last fall to the board. The company, developer of Estacado Estates in the north part of the school district, had offered a possible site for construction of a new elementary school.

*Consideration of re-employment of teachers as recommended by Jacobs and school principals.

*Approval of a textbook committee's report.

*Authorization for filing of suits for the collection of delinquent taxes.

The board meets at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the school administration building (old Neblett Hospital) in Canyon.

New city budget over $1 million; public hearing is Monday

For the first time, Canyon's budget will total more than $1 million.

Both planned expenditures and revenues are up by more than a third, with the increases primarily from higher water and trash rates and increased funding for capital improvements for water and sanitation departments.

City revenues are expected to total $1,210,665 next year, some $200,000 more than last year.

Higher residential trash collection rates to begin April 1 are expected to bring in $128,000 in revenue. Spending to begin putting in a containerized trash collection system in residential areas is budgeted at $50,000 for the purchase of one truck and 75 containers.

Higher water and sewer rates are expected to bring in $112,600 more in revenue this year than last. Projected water and sewer revenue in the new budget is $471,300.

A large portion of this will be spent in adding two new wells to the city water system. $120,000 is to be set aside for water expansion.

In all, capital improvements will amount to $270,990, some $150,000 more than last year.

Salaries are up a total of $45,949 in the new budget. Total costs for personal services is expected to be $466,495.

Supplies will cost $10,000 more this next year. A total of $82,986 is proposed for supplies and contractual services, which include utilities and insurance, has increased more than $60,000. Contractual services are planned at $256,215 for the year.

Recreation totals 3%

Total recreation programs will make up only about three per cent of next year's city budget, according to figures in the preliminary budget.

Proposed for parks and recreation, summer youth program and the swimming pool is $37,444.

This includes $10,000 earmarked for park expansion. Current plans call for the bulk of that money to be spent for construction of two new baseball diamonds for use this summer.

Other expenditures in the parks and recreation budget of $20,824 are $6,494 for salaries, $2,785 for supplies, and $1,545 for contractual services.

The summer youth program is budgeted at a total of $4,500, which is paid to West Texas State University to operate the program.

The swimming pool is expected to require $3,730 for salaries, $3,615 for supplies, $4,475 for contractual services and $300 for capital outlay for a total of $12,120.

Indebtedness is $122,900

Payments on borrowed money during the next fiscal year will cost Canyon taxpayers $122,963.

Three outstanding bond issues make up the city's bonded indebtedness.

This includes a general obligation bond issued in 1968 for a variety of projects such as sanitation improvements, sewer treatment plant expansion, and street improvements. The original amount was $440,000.

In 1972, the city refunded for $455,000 water and sewer bonds issued originally in 1957. According to finance officer Marguerite Strain, the refunding amounted to a considerable saving for the city because the bonds were purchased at a lower interest rate.

Another bond was issued in 1975 for $500,000 when certificates of obligation were refunded. The civic complex was built with the funds.

Food cost is $1500

Taxpayers will pick up a $1,575 tab for food next year, according to figures in the proposed budget. The allotments by department are used primarily for coffee, which, in addition to being served to city employees, is available also to visitors at city offices and at city meetings.

By department, the food allocations are:

City manager, $150; mayor and commissioners, $150; police, $350; fire, $450; sanitation administration, $100; residential collection, $100; commercial collection, $50; landfill, $50; street department, $150; water administration, $125; water production, $100; water distribution, $100 and sewer department, $100.

Projected revenues

A total of $1,210,665 is expected to be paid to the city next fiscal year, with the bulk of that coming from ad valorem taxes and water-sewer sales. City revenues are expected to be up $228,636 over last year, primarily from increased water, sewer and residential sanitation rates.

This is the first year that the city budget and revenues have exceeded one million dollars.

Where will the money come from?

Trash collection cost up

The cost of collecting and disposing of Canyon's trash next year will amount to $173,309. This is up $69,752 from last year and includes the first expenditures for changing the residential areas to containerized trash collection.

Revenue derived from collection fees is expected to amount to $171,600.

Sanitation services are divided into four areas in the proposed budget.

Sanitation administration is proposed to be funded at $14,100. This will include $11,415 for salaries; $1,380 for supplies; $1,305 for contractual services and nothing for capital outlay.

Residential sanitation will have a budget of $106,536. This includes $48,771 for salaries, up from the $47,225 last year; $5,375 for supplies; $2,190 for contractual services and $50,200 for capital outlay to begin the containerization program. A truck and 75 containers are scheduled to be purchased.

Commercial collection is to receive $20,430 next year. This includes $9,695 for salaries; $5,380 for supplies; $2,555 for contractual services and $2,500 for capital outlay.

The landfill is budgeted at $32,243, up $11,120 from last year.

Most of the increase is in contractual services, which jumped from $1,350 last year to $12,475 in the proposed budget. This will be used primarily to completely rebuild the city's five-year-old Caterpillar, which has had only minor repairs up to now. An additional expenditure will be for trenches prepared for the city at the landfill.

New purchase costs double

The city next year will more than double expenditures for capital improvements over last year.

A total of $270,990 is included in the proposed budget for capital outlay, compared to $120,773 last year.

Big items include $170,650 for water and sewer improvements, $50,200 for residential trash containerization and $10,000 for parks and recreation expansion.

Included in the allocation for water and sewer is $120,000 for new wells; $23,290 for remodeling the public works building, material for new services, one new fire hydrant, pipe, new meters, 15 meter boxes and fire hydrant repair parts. A total of $27,150 is planned for improvements in the sewer department, which will include moving and remodeling the old city library into a laboratory, and buying a filing cabinet, a hydraulic floor jack, participating in a lift station at Hunsley Hills, and purchases of sewer tile, manhole covers, sand for drying tanks and a three-quarter ton pickup.

Planned expenditures for the fire department are down for next year from $22,438 last year to $7,400. The drop reflects the end of payments on a new fire vehicle. Included in the proposed budget is a matching portion for a HUD grant, which, if approved, will finance a rescue tool called Jaws of Life. The hydraulic vise is used to extract trapped persons.

Also included as fire department improvements next year are further additions to the drill field. Firemen hope to move a frame house to the field to use for breathing apparatus practice.

The library is due an increase of $400 for books this year, from $3,100 last year to $3,500 included in this year's budget.

Capital outlay at the swimming pool is expected to drop from the $3,300 budgeted last year to $300 in next fiscal year.

Other departments include mayor and commission, $950 for furniture and fixtures, law books and fixed plant equipment; city manager, $300, for furniture and fixtures; community center, $425 for building remodeling, furniture and fixtures, plant equipment and other equipment; code enforcement, $780 for furniture and fixtures, code books, office equipment and radio equipment; police department, $5,365 for furniture and fixtures, law books, patrol vehicle, siren and speaker and a Colt .45 firearm; civic complex, $7,500 for parking lot paving, emergency power generator and fixed plant equipment; street department, $11,000 for a tractor mower, tractor blade and material for new streets.

Hearing set on Monday

Final consideration of the next city budget will be given at a public hearing Monday at 7 p.m. in the commissioners chambers at the civic complex.

The budget must be approved by city commissioners before April 1, when it will go into effect.

The public hearing will be the last opportunity for citizens to comment before the final budget is approved.

Fire Dept. costs down

Fire protection will cost city taxpayers $57,001 next year, a drop of $14,606 from the year before.

The decrease is due to a decline in expenditures for capital outlay, which last year included payments on a fire vehicle.

Capital expenditures budgeted for this year come to $7,400 compared to $22,438 budgeted in the 1975-76 fiscal year.

Salaries have climbed in the proposed budget, from $34,577 last year to $36,026 next year. There are two salaried employees: the deputy fire chief and a fireman. The remainder of the firemen are volunteers.

A slight increase is budgeted for supplies. Expenditures are estimated for next year at $5,625 compared to $5,155 in the '75-76 budget.

Both contractual services and capital outlay show a drop in the proposed budget. Contractual services are down from $9,437 to $7,950 planned for next year.

Included in the planned expenditures for next year are new breathing equipment to replace outdated apparatus, construction of a building to train for smoke inhalation prevention, and replacement for fire hoses.

Also included are funds to match a HUD grant request for the purchase of a rescue tool called "Jaws of Life." If the grant is approved, the city will pay a fourth of the cost for the hydraulic apparatus.

The city receives $18,000 from Randall County for fire protection under the exchange of services contract.

The Kitchen Sink

By SUSAN WILSON

Dear Anne,

Congratulations! When you and David told us you are expecting your first child, we were so surprised. We know how long you've waited and how much you want a baby, we're excited for you.

I thought of you the other day when I went to a baby shower. All the guests chattered happily about babies and made lighthearted jokes about pregnancy while the self-conscious mother-to-be squirmed uncomfortably. Most of the women were sympathetic, understanding, and openly grateful that they were not expecting, too. Why? Well, as you're finding out, pregnancy isn't much fun. I don't mean to be negative, just honest.

Remember all those jokes about morning sickness? They won't seem so funny in a short while. For some women it lasts all day long. It seems to be worse in women whose doctors deny its existence, and down-right humorous when husbands have it, too.

I have a friend who slept on the floor near the bathroom for nearly a month. She was afraid she couldn't make it from her bed on time.

I hope your morning sickness has passed. I guess you will start showing soon. Now comes the good part. You will learn to dread your doctor appointments and live in fear of weighing in on the scales. You're probably already tired of carrying that dainty little jar to your appointments.

Once you start showing people will start noticing you. And, talking to you. Absolute strangers will give you advice on everything from your health to caring for your baby.

It won't all be pleasant. You'll hear horror stories that will curl your toes. And you'll hear from some mighty rude bores, too. These are the fellows who like to start with "Hey, we all know what you've been doing." Then they say things that would make a lady of the evening blush.

And, new to the scene are the Zero Population folks who can be rude, too. While they are chastising you for bringing a child into the world you'll be worrying about its health because if you're going to go to this much trouble, you want a kid to last a lifetime.

All this time you'll be getting bigger and clumsier and more uncomfortable. Most pregnant women really get tired of reading about how they glow. Most agree that it was a typographical error somewhere along the line and really should read "grow."

Quite frankly, you won't feel very pretty. You'll find that you spend a lot of time going back and forth to the bathroom and you'll probably look in the mirror each time you pass. Ignore it. Cover it if you have to.

Your back will ache. You'll probably have heartburn. You'll be very sleepy but won't be able to get comfortable. When you reach this stage, it won't be long.

After my three pregnancies, I worked out a formula. When you are so tired of being pregnant that you don't think you can carry the baby one more day — then, you have a month left to go.

It seems like the day will never come. But it does.

Labor and delivery aren't as bad as you'll hear because at the end they will hand you your baby. A perfect, squalling, squirming mass. All tiny, and warm with David's eyes and your mouth and the sweetest little toes and fingers and ears and everything.

You won't want to put the baby down. You'll stare and hold and rock and kiss and touch and you won't be able to believe this miracle.

Then you'll understand, Anne, why — as bad as pregnancy is — I have three little girls.

God bless you. And the miracle you're carrying.

Miss Canyon to reign during bicentennial

Miss Canyon 1976 will reign during the bicentennial summer celebration and will be eligible to represent Canyon in a number of area contests during the year and 39 hopeful students from Canyon High School are currently seeking the crown.

Each candidate will be representing a local business in the annual competition being arranged by the Canyon Study Club.

Entries have been closed according to Mrs. Jerry Becknell, CSC president, and the public pageant will be held April 10 in the Canyon High School auditorium. Tickets will be available at the door that evening as contestants will be judged in appropriate Sunday styled dresses.

The contestants will be judged earlier on personality and poise during a pre-pageant coke party. Contestants will also participate in two pre-pageant rehearsals.

Co-chairmen for the pageant this year are Sandra McRoberts and Andrea Metcalf. The contest judges and other phases of the entertainment program will be announced soon by the coordinating club.

Palo Duro is planned site for first orienteering meet

The first orienteering meet to be held in this area is planned May 1 in Palo Duro Canyon.

About 75 invitations to colleges, universities, scout troops and high schools have been mailed recently by Maj. Dan Telfair, sponsor of WTSU's orienteering club.

Approximately 70 medals and trophies will be offered for races that range in difficulty from beginners to advance. Classes will be split by age and experience level.

Orienteering is a relatively new sport that combines cross country hiking with map reading.

The beginners' course, which will cover about three miles, will include male and female classes for ages 14 and under; 15-18; 19-35; 36-50 and 51 and over.

The orange course, about five miles, will be set up for high school students and scout troops. The classes for males and females will include ages 14 and under and 15-18.

The most difficult course, the red course, will be for college students and other adults. About seven miles long, the course will include male and female classes for ages 19-35; 36-50 and 51 and over.

Instructors from the WTSU orienteering club will train scouts or other groups interested in competing in the meet, said Telfair. In addition, the club meetings on Thursday from 5-7 p.m. at the ROTC building are open to the public, he said, and a practice meet will be held at the canyon April 30. Spectators are welcome, he said, and instruction on orienteering will be given at the practice meet. A pre-meet clinic will be held April 30 which will provide enough instruction to complete the beginners' course.

Trophies will be given to first and second place teams and for the first and second place individual male and female runners.

Telfair asked that persons or groups interested in competing in the orienteering meet to notify him at 656-3956 before April 1.

DORIS JEAN PIPKIN
SPEARMAN, TEXAS

Mrs. Pipkin was asked why she preferred to shop Thriftway while on a recent visit to the store. Here's what she had to say: "I enjoy getting the bargains and shopping in a nice clean store. I also enjoy visiting with the personnel, they are just like home folks."

In future weeks we will be asking a lot of our customers throughout Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma why they shop Thriftway where you are always a "TOTAL SAVER."
